

MORNING APPEAL.

Official Paper of Ormsby County.

Sunday, January 1, 1888.

Death of J. F. Farrell.

The Enterprise of yesterday morning chronicles the death of James Farrell, an operator in the Western Union telegraph office in Virginia City. Mr. Farrell was for many years manager of the telegraph office in this city, where he became a great favorite. Over two years ago his wife died in this city, leaving five children. This was a heavy loss to the father, and it is believed that it hastened his death. His children are now being educated in a Catholic Convent in Canada. Deceased was 47 years of age, and leaves a married sister in California. The funeral will take place today from the Catholic Church in this city.

Look Out for the Boy.

Edmund Dupuis the carrier of the APPEAL, who has suffered hardships innumerable during the past cold spell, while carrying the long APPEAL route, is out with the liveliest carrier's address ever offered to the public in this county. It is replete with silver and gold, with the poetry, type setting and everything, made right at home. As Mr. Dupuis is somewhat bashful, subscribers will please hand him half a dollar on sight and save time.

Monte Cristo.

The advent of the Lewis Monte Cristo Co. tomorrow evening, will be a dramatic treat for our citizens. The Evening Telegram, Portland, Oregon, has the following:

"A very creditable performance, indeed, was that given of Monte Cristo last evening by Horace Lewis and his company. The dramatization of the piece, the scenery, the costumes, the acting and everything connected with the performance was much better than any other presentation ever witnessed in Portland. Mr. Lewis is a careful, painstaking actor. As the rollicking young sailor, honest and loving, Mr. Lewis gives a fine characterization of the part. As the Abbe Bousoni he was quiet, calm and strong, repressing the emotion that rose in his breast, as becomes the man who has but one object in life—revenge. As the Count of Monte Cristo, Mr. Lewis furnishes a powerful character, making one forget slightness of his figure, which might otherwise militate against him. Mr. James Taylor, as Nortier, is also a finished actor. The support throughout was uniformly excellent, there being no sticks in the Company."

Reserved seats are now on sale at Tobriner's, and those desiring choice ones had better call early, as appearances point to a packed house.

A Rare Opportunity.

The Holiday excitement has subsided, and Prof. Harden steps in with his second term of school. His first term, notwithstanding the disadvantages of the near approach of the Holidays, was a grand success, which is proven by many of his scholars being able to command a pen with a degree of precision seemingly wonderful for such a short time. He says there is no finger movement allowed here; they have got to get there on their muscle in this school, and that is the secret of his success. The muscular movement is the movement without a doubt, and you should avail yourself of this rare opportunity through the medium of one whose knowledge and ability is acknowledged everywhere.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23, 1887.

In a recent letter I alluded to the private income of some of the Senators. A more minute and personal sketch will be interesting to your readers, and I briefly summarize the following for this letter: Frye, of Maine, is poor, and dependent on his salary, while his colleague Hale has a million and a half. The million came with his wife, who is the daughter of old Zach Chandler.

Blair, of New Hampshire, is five thousand dollars on the poverty side; while Chandler could be rich if he willed it, does not exceed $50,000.

Both of the Vermont Senators are rich, but neither exceeding a million; while both of the Massachusetts Senators are comparatively poor.

The two Rhode Island Senators are rich, and run up into the hundreds of thousands, which being well invested, nets them a handsome private income.

The Connecticut Senators are well fixed, but not rich. They look and act as though there are a great many things more valuable than money, and that the man who is contented is just as well off as if he were rich.

Evarts, of New York, earns tens of thousands every year by big law fees, but it slips away lavishly in banquets and charity, while his new colleague, Hiseock, is a little more saving, and has laid aside a good half million.

The New Jersey Senators own over a million each. Don Cameron, of Pennsylvania, has a private income of nearly $100,000 a year, while his colleague, Quay, the new Senator, is rated at a half a million.

The Senators from Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, and North Carolina, depend principally upon their salaries, while both of the Senators from Ohio run way up in the millions—Senator Payne being rated as high at $15,000,000.

Both Senators from Georgia are rich. Brown is said to be worth $2,000,000, which is chiefly the result of sagacious investments in railroads and Southern iron towns.

The Senators from Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, and Kentucky, rely chiefly upon their salaries for support. The same is true of the Indian Senators and of Senator Cullom of Illinois, but his colleague, Farwell, is worth $10,000,000.

Both the Michigan Senators are in the millions, and so is Sawyer, of Wisconsin, while his colleague, Spooner, is in the hundreds of thousands.

The Iowa and Minnesota Senators are "well to do," but not considered rich. Plumb, of Kansas, is worth a million, and Ingalls is in good moderate circumstances. The two Senators from Nebraska are rated at half a million each, and about the same may be said of Oregon Senators.

The California Senators are both above the starving point. Stanford is rated at $60,000,000, and Hearst at $20,000,000. Stanford's net income is over $2,000 per day. But he is a liberal, charitable man, and both himself and wife are very much liked here.

I hardly know what to say about Colorado and Nevada Senators in a monetary point of view. Each commenced poor, accumulated their millions, and fell back into poverty again; and so it has been, up and down, rich to-day, and poor to-morrow, and where to put them now is an enigma. They may be worth their millions, they may be poorer than the proverbial mouse. They seem to enjoy this hazardous business life, and we have no reason to complain so long as they are such excellent men in their public career.

In the round numbers, there is about $200,000,000 in personalty and realty represented on the floor of the Senate, and to suppose they will legislate against their interest, is a good stretch of the imagination.

President Cleveland is trying to find out the difference between a boom and a boomerang. Up to present time the boomerang has the advantage.

Mr. Randall scores another victory in getting the old rules of the House adopted for this session, which practically gives him control of all appropriation bills.
